French Provincial style and a few modern touches make this room a classic

French Provincial style doesn't date. In fact, it has remained in vogue for centuries and has universal appeal across many generations. The owners of this kitchen admired the style and when contemplating their kitchen renovation they wanted to achieve a French Provincial appearance without looking outdated, with lots of open spaces and storage incorporated as well.

The owners' list of requirements was quite extensive. While the French Provincial style appealed to them, they also wanted some modern touches, such as stainless-steel appliances. And as the room needs to cater to a large family, enough seating for seven was essential.

Design wise, they wished for an appliance cabinet with internal LED strip lighting to light up crockery and glasses, glass display cabinets to show off treasured kitchen items and bay windows to flood the space with light and to provide a pleasant outlook.

When planning the space, Michael Attard, designer at Attard's Kitchens and Cabinetry, had to take into consideration three entries to and from the kitchen as well as different floor levels and two large windows.

But the work didn't end there. The renovation included Attard's Kitchens and Cabinetry reducing door sizes and closing in other doorways leading to and from the kitchen. The Attard's team also removed a dividing wall to create one large room from two, giving the family essential extra space. They also installed a beam in the roof, moved one window up and installed new ceilings.

Long expanses of 30mm CaesarStone benchtop provide a clean, crisp palette that accentuates the white polyurethane doors and gives the family the preparation area they need. Chrome and brass handles on the cupboard doors and drawers add a traditional touch and fit with French Provincial design ideals.

"This kitchen now has a lot of character and is a space that can be used by the whole family at the one time," said Michael of this design classic.
